The answer is simple. There is no valuable reason to build this data center that even begins to outweigh the tremendous damage that it will do to our community. We are at a crossroads in this country in which we must choose between the profit of a few and the health of many. Any person in their right mind, with any semblance of moral compass, with any love for their family and the land they reside on, would vehemently appose this sickening proposition. For the love of this planet, its plants, its animals, its people, its soil, its water, and its its air, stand up and fight back against the sociopathy that is big tech.
