

Dylan Pommer

The people of New Mexico do not want a disgusting AI data center in our state. It is heartbreaking to wake up in the dystopian future where rich people are trying to destroy the environment so that people can apply ugly filters to their profile pictures. AI is a horrible technology, and we should not compromise our water and air quality in order to serve an immoral company like Oracle. We do not want higher energy bills, we don't want smoggy air, and we don't want some creep like Larry Ellison ruining our state.

The economic numbers they like to push are usually only for the construction of the center. Once it's built, the number of employees usually drops to below 100. There are no jobs to be had, that's just propaganda. We've seen this exact same rollout in other states, we know how it ends.

AI is a bubble, made very clear by the huge stock market drop last week when OpenAI went public. It was revealed that AI doesn't make very much revenue, so suddenly a bunch of other AI adjacent companies like Nvidia lost billions in value. When it crashes, we are going to left with a big ugly deserted building that made the lives of New Mexicans worse.

AI is a hated technology, it won't bring any jobs, it will drive up energy costs, it will pollute the state, and Oracle is a disgusting immoral company. There are no positive elements to this project.