

Emanuel Holguin

For a city that's already hot as is, with the humidity I wouldn't even want to be outside. For the people of El Paso and Las cruces, we are all one. This goes for anywhere though, these aren't natural resources being put in our environment, and to think of putting it right next to a big city is right is crazy unfair and overly bias, money is not happiness, and thats the main reason to this cause, they don't actually care about the people. It's all about money, not job opportunities. If they really cared they wouldn't be polluting our daily necessities like our air and water that's being used by millions. Our area is being manipulated and controlled by money and greed, last time I checked, we still have rights, and I'm pretty sure polluting and loitering our air and water is illegal.....