

Judith Phillips

While the new provisions make sense and are an improvement, the health of the surrounding communities is still at risk and many of these people have little voice and little access to support. The derailments and toxic spills in Ohio also raise a concern about the safety of communities through which the waste is transported.