

Craig Nazor

The problem of old oil wells leaking toxic substances into the Texas environment is now very large and growing. The $10 million dedicated to addressing this problem we already know is inadequate. Unfortunately, none of that money has yet been used yet to actually fix the problem! This is unacceptable. We need use that money NOW to try to find solutions. Based on what we learn by actually doing something, we need to allot more money as necessary. Without intervention, this problem will only get worse, and cost us FAR MORE MONEY in the future. The time to address this problem is NOW.

We also need to find a way moving forward to make oil companies more responsible for the problems they create in their mad rush for riches. The environment cannot continue taking these massive hits as profiteers walk off with no accountability. The current situation will destroy Texas as a great place to live. Why would any Texan support that?