

Benny Lewis

Additional training is going to be a burden to some operators and employers. The training required is not yet available, widespread, or affordable. Rural areas still don't have reliable internet to take online classes and would include days off work, travel, expenses. Ethics for all operators may not be the same. IE A BPAT operator accepting a tip to rush a test vs a mud employee accepting tips on the job. I could suggest a 2-hour video followed by a test, but it would still be a burden to some. (I have good operators that still don't have a personal e-mail address.)