I agree with a Jeff Henzler who wrote the following comment:

(I stated in the survey I just took I don't believe the ethics training will do any good not in the long run anyway. Most supervisors and Lead operators senior operators know the implications of falsifying documentation or doctoring samples. When we hire new people we watch them like a hawk and if there's any inclination of He or she not being ethical I'm going to fire you. Or very least petition to have you fired. Ethics is not something you can teach into a person either you have ethics and morals or you don't and if you don't we don't want you and we don't need you.) :

I retired in 2018 and have renewed my license twice since then. I wouldn't mind taking the Ethics class but I don't think it is necessary.
