

Robert Rathburn

The Copper World project isn't just about numbers on a page; it's about real people in our community. It's about families who see the promise of secure jobs and brighter futures for their children. It's about local businesses eager for the opportunity to grow and contribute. It's about a collective hope for a revitalized community where everyone thrives. This widespread support isn't simply a matter of opinion; it's a testament to the potential this project holds for our future. ADEQ, as a public servant of our community, has a responsibility to listen to these voices and consider their needs. By granting the permit, ADEQ can demonstrate its commitment to collaborative development that prioritizes the well-being of those it serves, ensuring that the benefits of this project reach every corner of our community.

Sincerely,
