

Thomas Elliott

The proposal of this vastly destructive mining project, essentially in the heart of a major metropolitan area, is absurd on many accounts. The water usage alone makes the project unthinkable in this area and this epoch of decreasing water supplies. The unavoidable water pollution is an equal non-starter. The destruction of quality of life and tourism value will never be reversed. The few jobs created (mostly for workers from out of state) are insignificant in the long run; the profits will go to a company from a foreign country. The project is absolutely, totally, completely unrealistic and unacceptable.
