I don't see why the people that have the responsibility to run an organization the size of EPA within a state operating with an $80B budget aren't capable of doing the work of a committee of people already employed. Get feedback from your 500 strong staff and their constituents. Seems like the EJAC is only a new political fall guy for the CDPR. If the management in place now can't handle prioritizing their budget and people we need a new set of people to manage the organization.

I know this suggestion won't fly because the politics not the real need are driving the creation of another committee creation is led by those who have some agenda issues they think CDPR is not radical enough to address so the committee will be their ally and justification.

Good luck with this money and time waster.
