I say 40 year member of the Sierra Club, I strongly oppose this new proposed mission to use anticoagulant rodenticides. Our church carefully added a Barnell box in recent years to see if we can get some reduction of ground squirrel burrowing in our front lawn. Barbell' is meant to be red as barn owl. For some reason this page is not allowing me to go back and correct anything I've already dropped into this box. Anyway, the end result has been very positive. Our church does not wish to use rodenticides when we've been perfectly able to make a barn, owl, family, happy in an area where they can find plenty of food. Further, these rodenticide are also associated with mange in bobcats. Yet another biological scourge arising from, at least in part, these rodenticides. I strongly recommend not proceeding with the changes you have proposed. Our birds and wildlife are already enough under attack, and their decreased numbers are already visible to people like me who live on the shore of the San Francisco Bay. Please do not proceed with this change to the rules for anticoagulation rodenticides. Kind regards, Adelaide Nye, [REDACTED].
