

David Simon

I understand that rodents in general and rats in particular can be a big problem. However, anticoagulant rodenticides kill not only the rodents but the animals that prey on them right up the food chain. This is not the technique we should rely upon in California for rodent control, except perhaps in emergency situations, and I therefore oppose any loosening of regulations on this method.