

Max Stoaks

I understand what a problem rodent infestations can be. However, expanding the use of anticoagulants is not a good way to tackle this problem. There is too much potential for risk to non-targeted life including local fauna such as birds and other mammals. All other options should be pursued including removing cover and food sources. When destroying rodents is necessary, it should be done in a human manner that is quick and as painless as possible (such as physical traps). Please protect our wildlife.