

Mike Joplin

As a long-time resident of Brighton Beach, I have serious concerns about the upcoming Brighton Beach Waterfront project. While I understand the potential benefits that the project could bring, such as increased tourism and economic growth, I worry about the impact on the local community. Specifically, I am concerned about the potential negative impacts on transportation and accessibility in the area. With the construction and increased traffic that the project is likely to bring, I worry that it will be difficult for residents and visitors alike to navigate the area by bicycle or on foot.